

Disney's Aladdin Jr. Summary

Welcome to the faraway land of Agrabah, the city of enchantment, where every beggar has a story and every camel has a tail! Let your magic carpet carry you into the Arabian night and join Aladdin on his quest for the heart and hand of Princess Jasmine.

Aladdin is a mere street urchin who has a chance meeting with Princess Jasmine as she wanders through the marketplace. There is an immediate attraction, but as per tradition, Princess Jasmine is to marry soon, and she must marry a PRINCE! Poor Aladdin was certainly not a prince. To make matters worse, the choice of who she marries is to be made by her father, the Sultan!

Princess Jasmine must also contend with Jafar, the Sultan's right hand man who is as evil as they come! He wants to become the Princess's husband and take the place of the Sultan!

When the Sultan's men arrest Aladdin and imprison him in a cave, (the dungeon was already overcrowded) Aladdin discovers the magic lamp and the genie. Aladdin's wish of becoming a prince and marrying the princess can now come true! Unfortunately, Jafar doesn't give up! He tries to trick Aladdin and the genie, but his deceitful plot fails and Aladdin becomes a prince, per his wish, and the wedding is set.

But, as the wedding nears, Aladdin's conscience takes a toll and reality sets in. Aladdin doesn't want to pretend to be a prince all of his life. As the couple head for the altar, Aladdin confesses that he is not really a prince. Pressure from the Princess and townspeople persuade the Sultan to change the law, and the princess marries Aladdin, and the Sultan becomes a better father.

As the newlyweds begin their lives together, The Magic Carpet Airline takes off, and The Children's Theatre of Cincinnati takes you to a "Whole New World".